To Whom It May Concern,

Keshia Meissner has been the Executive Director for Beacon of Life for almost four years. In this short time she has completely changed the program in a way that is awe-inspiring. She is dedicated to making the program beneficial to clients by focusing on their ever-changing needs. She is always looking for networking opportunities, partnerships and ways to spread our mission. She is connected to the community and is involved with multiple boards and committees.

While these connections are important, it is the spirit she brings to the Beacon that makes her special and influential. She goes above and beyond the call of duty and puts her heart and soul into this organization. I am honored to be working for a woman who not only believes in what she does, but believes in the spirit of each and every individual she comes across.

Keshia deserves the Women of Influence award as she incorporates all of the important qualities; dedication, honor, empathy, passion and drive. This organization, and world, is a better place because of her spirit and hard work.

Sincerely,

Julie Hewitt
